- Cases that easily discolor

A quick question, which is dirtier, your tablet case or a public restroom? Most will go for the public restroom. But reports show that your case is likely to be ten times dirtier than a public restroom. This is why over time, tablet cases do become discolored. Clear cases do become discolored due to the ultraviolet light from the sun. Exposing your clear case to the sun causes oxidation on the case's surface which turns it yellow. The solution is to purchase a case made of high-quality materials. You can also go for colorful cases. The color disperses the light which reduces oxidation and allows the case to retain its original color.

- Cases that block port accessibility

Many cases today have port covers that are said to eliminate dust particles from entering various ports like the charging port. This feature may seem useful but, often the flexible part covering the ports comes off and sharp edges are left around the case. On the other hand, some port covers, get stuck in the port and become difficult to remove.

Go for one that does not have a port blocker. You will avoid damaging your tablet and also enjoy easier charging. If you need one with port blockers, make sure the cases have precise cutouts to reduce the chances of it breaking.

- Cases without shock absorption

Durability is very crucial in any case. One of the main functions of a case is to absorb shock when it falls. The case should have a layer of material for shock absorption, it is a must-have for any high-quality tablet case. This is important especially when the tablet falls. No damage occurs. Without shock absorption, the chances of your tablet cracking, shattering, or chipping increase tenfold. That is why you need a case with a shock absorption feature.

However, there are tablet covers and tablet cases. In your search for protection for your tablet, you will find that there are cases and covers. Covers are also known as book covers since they only attach to the back of the tablet. When you have a book cover, it means the tablet's screen is left unprotected.

How are tablet book covers different from tablet cases? Covers are often bought by those that use their tablet as secondary laptops. So the screen does not need to be protected because it is in constant use. However, as we have seen above there are numerous risks that come with it. Get the best Samsung book cover from Mobspares.
