The song's combination of piano, guitar, and captivating vocals will have listeners feeling empowered and ready to move on from their past relationship.

In the opening verse, Olivier Delcroix sets the tone for the song with his poignant lyrics. The featured songstress sings about how yesterday and tomorrow feel sad and estranged, capturing the sense of loneliness and uncertainty that often follows a breakup. Delcroix's lyrics then goes on to describe how someone used to be their partner's every day, but now they're just silent and grey.

The chorus is the heart of the song, with the singer repeating the phrase "silent and grey" four times, emphasizing the feeling of emptiness and numbness that often accompanies the end of a relationship. The repetition also highlights the sense of finality that comes with a breakup, as if the singer is accepting that the relationship is truly over.

Delcroix's electrifying instrumentation and the captivating vocals make this a must-listen for anyone who is looking to accept their state of induced independence and move on from their past.

As a French songwriter and producer, Olivier has learned to surround himself with performers in different Alt-pop styles and is always looking for featurings.

He loves combining chart Pop conventions with alternative/indie genre sensibilities.
