Her areas of special interest are in health maintenance and disease prevention, and educating patients about ways to improve their own health status.

Born and raised in Honolulu, Hawaii, Dr. Lee studied at the University of Hawaii, John Burns School of Medicine. While there, she trained part-time at Kaiser Permanente Honolulu. She was impressed with the comprehensive, one-fee care model that she saw in action. When the time arrived for her to begin her residency, it seemed natural to choose San Francisco Medical Center.

Internal medicine is the medical specialty dealing with the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of adult diseases. Physicians specializing in internal medicine are called internists. They manage and prevent common and complex diseases by providing comprehensive care and promoting overall well-being.

A married mother of two, Dr. Lee enjoys doing anything with her children, especially outdoors. She thrives by trying to eat organic, shopping at farmers' markets, and finding time to laugh every day. Family is very important to her, so she tries to spend as much free time with them as possible. They have a lot of backyard barbeques, picnics, and adventures.
