The origin of the Scottish Fold breed can be traced back to 1961 when a cat named Susie was discovered on a farm in Scotland. Susie had a unique genetic mutation that caused her ears to fold forward, giving her a distinctive appearance. She quickly became popular among the local cat community and soon began to attract the attention of breeders who saw an opportunity to create a new breed of cat.

To create a Scottish Fold kitten, breeders must breed a cat with folded ears with a cat with normal ears. Despite their popularity, Scottish Fold kittens have faced some controversy in recent years.
