What is Typesetting?

Typesetting is the composition of the text while arranging and formatting a page that is readable and effectively convey its intended message. It is responsible for the margin size, fonts, and paragraph styles in which the page layout will be best for the reader. So, typesetting has become crucial in digital formats, ensuring that content is eligible for various digital services.

Best Typesetting Practices for Content Design: Font Selection:

When you are writing content choose the appropriate and legible font. Use the fonts such as sans serif or serif so they can be readable in different sizes and with proper format.

Font Size and Spacing:

Use the font size and spacing properly which is comfortable to readers. Font size is typically between 10-12 points for body text and spacing between the lines is around 120-145% of the font size.

Paragraph Formatting:

Make the paragraph separate, and the text should be easier so that reader can read it easily. Avoid line breaks and leave the space between the first line of the paragraph.

Alignment:

Choose the alignment between left-aligned, right-aligned, centered, or justified text to maintain it throughout the document. Large gaps between the words or justified text should be avoided.

Margins and Page Layout:

Margins should be appropriate to provide enough whitespace near the content. Use the margins around all the page slides and view the format output in print or digital when choosing page size or a layout.
