

KK Windows Introduces Fresh New Stocks of Contemporary Doors and Windows

Aluminium is an excellent material for doors and windows because of its high thermal efficiency, which helps it withstand the harsh Irish weather. Compared to its performance and utility, aluminium framing is much more affordable.

Aluminium Casement Window

Casement Windows work best with a fully open window and thus allow maximum ventilation, and they are the safest ones due to their immensely strong internal frames. These structures have a single hinged joint in the frame. The design can use both single and paired panels in a shared frame that is hinged on the exterior.

- The slick and timeless design can have quite some variety, from top or side-hung openings to French or Bay window styles.
- Compared to wooden profiles, aluminium casement windows are more tolerant of weather-borne damage, especially rain and snow.
- The aluminium profiles, with their glossy and smooth colour finish and chamfer edges, create a classic look with modern materials and technology.

KK Windows has collaborated with KOMMERLING, which is a German manufacturer of window profiles and other products and is currently Europe's top producer of energy-efficient door and window systems. Whether you use it in your small kitchen, on the facade of a commercial building, or to enclose a sunroom, there are plenty of ways you can maximise the good use of these aluminium casement windows.

Aluminium Tilt-and-Turn Windows

These designs are modern and highly versatile, allowing 90-degree turns or tilts as you please. Tilt-and-turn glass windows operate on a mechanical hinge that opens on two axes, so you can tilt or turn the window 90 degrees with a single handle. Since homeowners get access to the front and back of the windows, much like a door, they can clean it inside out very efficiently. This design is ideal for many different types of installations, from individual houses to high-spec apartment blocks. Tilt-and-turn windows offer draft-free ventilation and are excellent fire escapes.
