About the Author

Retired after a distinguished thirty-year career in neurological surgery in San Diego County, Theodore G. Obenchain brings a unique and thought-provoking perspective to the intersection of religion and science. Raised in a religious household, Obenchain's journey into adulthood saw him grappling with the supernatural elements of orthodox Christianity. His deepening exploration of the natural tension between organized religion and biological science solidified his views, giving rise to his heterodox perspective on religion, as eloquently portrayed in this loosely autobiographical work. A seasoned author, Dr. Obenchain has previously penned two other notable books, "The Victorian Vivisection Debate: Frances Power Cobbe, Experimental Science and the 'Claims of Brutes'" and "Genius Belabored: Childbed Fever and the Tragic Life of Ignaz Semmelweis." Now residing in San Diego, California, with his wife, Dr. Obenchain invites readers to engage with his nuanced reflections on religion, providing a compelling reply to the claims of conventional believers based on his rich experiences growing up in a Christian world.
