

Author Unveils Candid Insights in New Book "Up-Close and Personal" Exposing Trump's Alleged Divine Connections

Wilmington, Delaware Feb 22, 2024 (IssueWire.com) - In an unapologetically candid exploration, Harris, Lionel Barry, releases "Up-Close and Personal: The Rise of the Trumplican Party," a thought-provoking book that delves into the motivations behind the author's decision to challenge conventional perceptions of Donald John Trump.

The author, who also personally designed the book's cover, reveals that the driving force behind this project was a deep-seated frustration. Having penned two previous books about Trump, Harris asserts that Trump lacks any religious inclination. To emphasize this perspective, the author chose a provocative cover depicting 'apes,' questioning whether Trump subscribes to the theory of evolution.

The release of "Up-Close and Personal" comes at a time when the former president is being associated with divine roles, such as "the Chosen One" and "Orange Jesus." This has left Harris not only agitated but also compelled to challenge these assertions vehemently.

Harris, Lionel Barry has been aware of Donald John Trump for five decades and adamantly insists that he is undeserving of titles that liken him to figures of religious significance. The author takes a firm stance against the characterization of Trump as a benevolent deity or a man of great faith, expressing concern for those who propagate such views.

The book challenges the notion that Trump resembles or mimics the Jesus Christ figure in the Bible, contending that it is a blatant insult to the life of Christ. Harris, and Lionel Barry argue that genuine Christians strive to emulate the living Christ, a quality conspicuously absent in Trump's public persona.

In "Up-Close and Personal: The Rise of the Trumplican Party," Harris, Lionel Barry explores personal experiences and reflections on spirituality, drawing from a journey that began decades ago in an effort to understand and embody the principles of Christianity. The author encourages readers to critically assess those who elevate Trump to divine status, cautioning against the potential alignment with what is described as a "devil-weaved cloth."

About the Author

LIONEL BARRY HARRIS is a native of Saint Louis, MO. After serving a three-year tour in the US Army, he persistently pursued his writing desires while, simultaneously, engaging in a whole gamut of diverse and interesting jobs. Along with managing a large janitorial facility in the state of Indiana, he, alternately, returned to his hometown in Missouri and was (subsequently) employed by the federal government - both, 'The Potter Electric' and 'Wagner Electric companies, the St. Louis Police Department, and (the most enduring and gratifying of them all), the Saint Louis Public Schools at the high school level. In addition to the thirty-four years he worked there, he also served part-time in the GED program (nine years) and was adept as a department store salesman as well. Then, after retirement, Harris drove a school bus for the Ferguson-Florissant School District (six years) and, alternately, proceeded to drive a courtesy bus for senior citizens in St. Louis County to cap off his work history. Although Harris penned "Up-Close and Personal - The Rise of the Trumplican Party," he also wrote "Racism, Sexism, Trumpism, Pseudo-Christianity, and the Cinema," "The Long and Winding Road," and "Dark Yesterdays-Bright Tomorrows."
