New Castle, Pennsylvania Mar 5, 2024 (Issuewire.com) - March is abuzz with excitement as Meeka Coblentz, a 10-year-old writer, celebrates the sale of her first 100 books online. What makes this achievement even more extraordinary is the fact that Meeka Coblentz penned her debut work, Totally Paw-some; Super Schäfer, during a story time with her mother, showcasing an early passion for storytelling that has now blossomed into a promising literary career. Totally Paw-some, the soon the be series, is the fruit of Meeka Coblentz's creativity nurtured in the walls of Mohawk Elementary's 2nd-grade classroom, has taken the online literary world by storm. The charming narrative, which centers around Meeka and her pups who gain superpowers, has not only resonated with readers of similar ages but has also captivated a diverse audience with its innocence and imaginative spirit.

Coblentz's journey to a published author has been a source of inspiration for educators, parents, and young aspiring writers in the local community. Her achievement underscores the importance of fostering creativity and literacy skills from a young age. Coblentz, who has now overcome her early literary struggles, now wants to inspire other young children to write their stories. The local school community, including teachers and classmates, has been instrumental in supporting Coblentz's literary aspirations. Mohawk Elementary proudly celebrates the success of its young alumna and recognizes the potential for greatness that was evident even in those early writing days.

Expressing her joy and gratitude, Coblentz shares, "I can't believe all this started with a notebook from the dollar store! Thank you to everyone who believed in me."

To commemorate this milestone, Coblentz will be hosting a virtual book reading and Q&A session on Saturday, March 23rd, 2024 at 6 pm, inviting readers of all ages to join in and share the excitement. Details on how to participate can be found on Coblentz's social media channel.
