Dover, Delaware May 29, 2024 (IssueWire.com) - Fortunes Time's latest edition "The Most Admired People in Real Estate, 2024" has featured success stories of renowned real estate visionaries from across the world whose expertise in the industry is echoing globally. The cover has Nicholas N. Bouri who has a proven track record in various industries, including Real Estate, Shipping & Port Services, Mining, and Building Materials (Cement, Concrete, and Aggregates), with a focus on Central and Eastern Europe (CEE). He is a Partner at N.G.B Construction & Management and a firm believer in continuous personal and professional development. Nicholas' specialization lies in Business Development, Sales, Construction, and Project Management.

Technology developments and changing consumer preferences are about to completely change the real estate scene, with the next five years expected to see significant changes in this sector. The real estate industry is set for significant advancements and challenges in the future, including the incorporation of AI-driven solutions and shifting buyer preferences. Commercial real estate is a strategic asset as well as an operational requirement. However, senior management is rarely interested in it.

Real estate is still often viewed as a reactive, second-order staff role in many firms, with an emphasis on specific transactions and projects rather than the larger strategic concerns facing the business. Real estate will play an ever-bigger role in a company's capacity to compete globally, attract and keep top personnel, and maintain its worldwide presence as the business enters a new era of more responsible and responsive capitalism. Real estate is inherently non-neutral. It has the power to increase or decrease shareholder value, support an organization's competitiveness, organizational development, and market position, and assist it fulfill its goal and carry out its plan. "The Most Admired People in Real Estate, 2024" has featured visionaries like Nicholas N. Bouri who are drawn to real estate and their understanding of the problems and ideas underlying their biggest assets.
