

Sarah Getz, PhD, Explores Cognitive Neuroscience in Groundbreaking Research at the University of Miami

Leading Neuropsychologist Investigates Frailty Syndrome and Deception in the Elderly Population

New York City, New York Jul 3, 2024 (IssueWire.com) - Dr. Getz, a distinguished Instructor of Neuropsychology in the Department of Neurology at the University of Miami's Miller School of Medicine. With a PhD in psychology, specializing in cognitive neuroscience from Princeton University, she brings a wealth of knowledge and expertise to her research endeavors.

Having completed her clinical training in Boston, with externships at prestigious institutions like Harvard Medical School and a clinical internship at the Miami VA Medical Center, she is at the forefront of cutting-edge research. Her dissertation research at Princeton focused on the intricate role of cognitive control in decision-making processes, setting the stage for her groundbreaking work in neuropsychology.

Pursuing research that is as diverse as it is impactful, Dr. Getz delves into the influence of lifetime emotional factors in the development of frailty syndrome, shedding light on this critical area of study. Additionally, she is exploring the cognitive and socio-affective correlates of scam susceptibility and deception, particularly focusing on vulnerable elderly populations.

With a keen focus on practical applications, she is spearheading efforts to develop screening measures and primary interventions aimed at reducing deception among the elderly. Her dedication to improving the quality of life for older adults through innovative research is commendable and promises to have far-reaching implications in the field of neuropsychology.

As a respected member of the University of Miami's faculty, Dr. Getz is not only contributing to the academic community but also making a tangible difference in the lives of individuals affected by cognitive challenges. Her passion for advancing our understanding of the human mind and behavior is evident in her commitment to rigorous research and evidence-based practices.
