The second edition stands out for its interdisciplinary approach, featuring 2 co-editors and contributions from 82 experts across a range of fields including medical anthropology, occupational therapy, physical therapy, law, geriatrics, epidemiology, neurology, nutrition, and more. The diverse perspectives offer a holistic view of aging-related changes and how individuals can adapt to retain their independence and engagement in daily life activities. The book addresses key topics such as:

- Neurological and physiological changes in aging
- Interventions for low vision and hearing
- Ethical and legal considerations
- Aging with disabilities
- Mental health, spirituality, and resilience
- The impact of the physical environment on aging
- Transportation, driving, and mobility
- Family, social support, and healthcare services

With experienced international editors at the helm and contributions from global thought leaders, the book highlights the role of occupational therapy in enhancing quality of life for aging adults by fostering collaboration across professions. The detailed content, backed by credible research studies, presents a roadmap for best practices in assessment and intervention.

About Karen Frank Barney

Karen Frank Barney discovered her passion for occupational therapy at the young age of 12 and has remained dedicated to the field ever since. With over 13 years of hands-on experience working in hospitals and skilled care facilities, she transitioned into academia in 1980, becoming an influential occupational therapy educator. Throughout her distinguished 5 decade career, Karen has taught at both the associate degree and professional levels across four higher education institutions, including Madison College, Eastern Kentucky University, Washington University, and Saint Louis University.

Her remarkable contributions to the field were recognized when she was awarded Emerita status at Saint Louis University, honoring her legacy of excellence in teaching and mentoring future occupational therapists.

Karen is also deeply committed to her family. She is happily married and takes great pride in being the mother of four children, grandmother to seven, and great-grandmother to eight.
