OSHA 30 refers to a 30-hour training designed to meet the needs of every small and growing high-risk industry. OSHA 30 training provides participants with advanced safety and compliance skills. It teaches them leadership and decision-making skills, enabling them to complete a job safety analysis to ensure OSHA safety standards are met. It covers potential job hazards and teaches how to prevent and manage dangerous working conditions. They are prepared to recognize and reduce possible accidents, resulting in a safer and more compliant working environment.

After completing this training, the participants receive OSHA 30 certification. An OSHA 30 training is not just safety training but vital investment in personal safety and professional development. It is for safety supervisors or anyone in the industry's safety responsibility role so that they are adequately trained to ensure that every worker is working in a hazard-free environment. The OSHA 30 training is a powerful tool to enhance your knowledge of workplace safety standards, paving the way for professional growth and career advancement.

There are two industry-specific OSHA 30 certifications:

The U.S. Department of Labor's Assistant Secretary for Occupational Safety and Health Doug Parker said, "Every worker death has profound impacts on family, friends, co-workers and communities. That is why investing in worker safety and health must be a core value in every workplace across the country. All workers have a right to do their job without fear of being injured or sickened."

Since OSHA's establishment in 1971, workplace fatalities have been cut by 60 percent and occupational injury and illness rates by 40 percent. At the same time, U.S. employment has nearly doubled from 56 million workers at 3.5 million worksites to 105 million workers at nearly 6.9 million sites.

In its first half-century, OSHA has helped transform America's workplaces in ways that have significantly reduced workplace fatalities, injuries, and illnesses. To achieve more, OSHA requires workers to complete safety compliance training courses covering lessons on eliminating or diminishing occupational hazards. This certification helps U.S. employers stay compliant with OSHA regulations. OSHA 30 training is becoming mandatory in more states and industries every day as employers looking to reduce workplace accidents and improve operational efficiency find OSHA 30 certification to be an important qualification.
