The popularity of Black Friday

Black Friday became an established tradition in the United States in the late 1980s. However, its history dates back to the 1950s, when managers reportedly used the term to describe the day several workers called in sick after Thanksgiving.

Its popularity skyrocketed in the 1970s when Philadelphia newspapers adopted 'Black Friday' to signify the start of holiday shopping. In the succeeding years, companies embraced the term to promote several product deals. Since then, Black Friday has significantly grown, with retailers intensifying efforts to attract customers.

Shopping for products on Black Friday is generally the same as the regular shopping experience. The main difference is that the goods are relatively cheaper during Black Friday. In recent years, more sellers have offered great deals and discounts online than in their physical stores.
