

Dr. Laura K. Culley: Pioneering Community Engagement in Healthcare Delivery

Innovative Approaches to Healthcare Delivery Empower Local Communities Through Engagement and Comprehensive Care

New York City, New York Jan 7, 2025 (Issuewire.com) - The Kirk Kerkorian School of Medicine at UNLV proudly announces the achievements and ongoing contributions of Dr. Laura K. Culley, MD, MPH, FACP, who serves as the Associate Dean of Community Engagement and Adjunct Associate Professor of Internal Medicine. With an impressive background in both clinical practice and community health, she is at the forefront of innovative healthcare delivery methods that emphasize the importance of connecting with the communities she serves.

A semi-retired internist based in Las Vegas, NV, she has dedicated her career to the medical treatment of adults, addressing both common and rare diseases. As an internist, she not only acts as a primary care physician but also collaborates as a consultant with other medical professionals. Her comprehensive approach to patient care encompasses disease prevention, mental health support, and the management of treatment plans that often involve surgical interventions.

“Healthcare is not just about treating illnesses; it’s about building relationships and understanding the unique needs of our communities,” said Dr. Culley. “I believe that integrating community engagement into the practice of medicine is essential for enhancing health outcomes and ensuring that patients receive the holistic care they deserve.”

Dr. Culley’s commitment to community engagement is evident in her innovative initiatives aimed at improving healthcare access and education. She has spearheaded multiple outreach programs designed to reach underserved populations, providing them with vital health resources and information. Her work focuses on breaking down barriers to healthcare, promoting health literacy, and empowering individuals to take control of their health.

One of the hallmark projects led by Dr. Culley is the “Healthy Communities Initiative,” which seeks to enhance health outcomes in various neighborhoods across Las Vegas. This initiative includes health fairs, screening events, and educational workshops that address prevalent health issues such as diabetes, hypertension, and mental health. By actively engaging with community members, she and her team aim to foster a supportive environment where individuals can learn about their health and well-being.

In her academic role at the Kirk Kerkorian School of Medicine, Dr. Culley is passionate about training the next generation of healthcare professionals. She emphasizes the importance of community-oriented care in the medical curriculum, ensuring that students understand the significance of social determinants of health and the impact of healthcare disparities. Her dedication to education extends beyond the classroom, as she frequently engages with students in hands-on community service projects.

As the healthcare landscape continues to evolve, Dr. Culley remains committed to exploring new and innovative ways to deliver care. She advocates for policies that support community health initiatives and believes in the power of collaboration among healthcare providers, community organizations, and local governments to create sustainable health solutions.
