

Worldly Goods Too Introduces Hand-Blown Glass Décor and Sustainable Packaging Practices

Worldly Goods Too, a company with over 25 years in the wholesale industry, offers a range of hand-blown glass home décor.

Charlotte, North Carolina Jan 29, 2025 (Issuewire.com) - Worldly Goods Too, a company with over 25 years in the wholesale industry, offers a range of hand-blown glass home décor. Initially serving national stores and designers, the company expanded in 2016 to provide its products directly to individuals and decorators. Its offerings include handmade glass wall spheres and other decorative items, crafted using recycled materials. These items are available for purchase through their website.

Handmade Glass Décor Crafted from Recycled Materials

Worldly Goods Too specializes in hand-blown glass products, with a focus on wall assortments and decorative glass spheres. The glass used in these items is recycled, much of it sourced from tequila bottles, and is crafted by skilled artisans in a workshop in Mexico. Each piece is handmade, reflecting the techniques and creativity of the artisans involved.

The use of recycled materials aligns with the company's commitment to sustainability, offering customers a way to incorporate environmentally conscious choices into their home décor.

Sustainable Packaging Innovations

For years, Worldly Goods Too relied on shredded newspaper to package its glass products. With the decline of printed newspapers, the company has transitioned to organic hay as a packing material. This change ensures that items remain secure during shipping while adhering to environmentally friendly practices.

The use of hay serves as a biodegradable alternative to traditional packing materials, reflecting methods used before the widespread availability of paper. This adjustment is part of Worldly Goods Too's broader efforts to reduce its environmental impact.
