

Experimental Rock-Duo Zement Makes a Statement with Their Latest Music Project

Bringing a blended taste of psychedelic and experimental rock music, Zement has come up with a brand new music project that showcases their talent and free spirit.

Nuremberg, Feb 20, 2025 (Issuewire.com) - The free spirit of music can be quite liberating for the listeners just like Zement's latest musical work. This talented rock duo is best known for their experimental work that offers the blended essence of psychedelic rock, alt-rock, and indie. They have recently dropped an album project called 'Passagen' that features some of the most spectacular tracks that depict their creative minds. The track 'Back to My Looping Cave' stands for its amazing pace and distortion that sounds like a call from the past. They have done a really great job in building a hooky loop that is both enjoyable and captivating.

On the other hand, there is another track called 'Making a Living (I Don't Know What I Want, but I Know How to Get It)' which offers a more percussive energy with a bopping essence. The composition offers determination with a pinch of drama which makes it even more engaging. It is an instrumental track but the theme speaks louder like its title. It is hard to believe how only two of them made such a grand arrangement.

Zement was formed with multi-instrumentalists Philipp Hager and percussion expert Christian Büdel who perfectly understands each other's rhythm. Their musical creations have a free jazz spirit that sounds incredibly invigorating. They combine the elements of Neo-Krautrock, Neo-Psychedelia, Noise-Rock & different types of contemporary Electronic Dance Music to create a unique and eclectic taste.
