

Raising the Stakes: How Aces High London Uses Poker to Build Stronger, Smarter, and More Strategic Teams

London, United Kingdom Mar 4, 2025 (IssueWire.com) - What if the key to better teamwork, sharper decision-making, and stronger negotiation skills was... a deck of cards? Aces High London, founded by former investment banker turned entrepreneur Jo Living, is transforming team building and professional development by using poker as a fun, interactive way to develop real-world business skills—without the gambling.

Bluffing? Not required. In Aces High, teams learn to read the room, assess risks, and think strategically—just like in scaling and building teams, honing leadership, and strategic negotiations skills. Through fast-paced, high-energy poker exercises, participants work together to develop confidence, communication, and critical thinking skills. With no money involved, the focus is on strategy, teamwork, and the psychology of decision-making—less about luck and more about learning skills that last a lifetime.

"Poker is the perfect training ground for business and life—it's about knowing when to take a risk, when to hold back, and how to read subtle cues from those around you," says Jo, "Aces High isn't just about learning the game—it's about breaking down barriers, boosting confidence, and helping teams collaborate more effectively, all while having a great time."

With interactive sessions designed for companies and teams, Aces High provides a refreshing alternative to traditional corporate training, helping professionals build resilience, emotional intelligence, and leadership skills in a setting that's engaging, inclusive, and—most importantly—fun.
