With an impressive background in government finance and consulting, Roberto has played a critical role in budgeting, sales tax policy, and financial planning for municipalities. From his early career as Director of Finance for the Municipality of Guayanilla (1989-1992) to his tenure in the Puerto Rico Senate for Municipal Affairs (1993-2000), he has been a driving force in strengthening local government financial operations.

In the interview, Roberto reflects on his humble beginnings in Guánica, Puerto Rico, his love for baseball and reading, and the importance of education in shaping his career. After earning a Bachelor’s degree in Public Administration and Economics (Cum Laude) in 1988 and an MBA in Finance in 1992 from the Interamerican University of Puerto Rico, San Germán Campus, he quickly became a trusted leader in financial governance.

“Managing a city’s budget is like running a household—you have to be careful with spending and make sure every dollar counts,” says Roberto in the interview, emphasizing the importance of financial responsibility in public service.

In 2001, Roberto founded RWM Consultants Inc., a firm dedicated to helping municipalities optimize their financial strategies. Under his leadership, the company has assisted local governments in developing sustainable financial models, improving revenue streams, and ensuring fiscal compliance.

Not stopping there, Roberto expanded his entrepreneurial ventures in 2015 by launching RWM Real Property Inc., further applying his financial expertise to real estate consulting and property management.

Throughout the interview, Roberto discusses the evolving landscape of municipal finance, the impact of digital financial tools, and the need for ongoing education in public administration. He also shares personal insights on overcoming challenges, staying productive, and the power of building strong relationships in business and government.

"Cities grow when people have homes and businesses. Public finance and real estate are deeply connected, and I've always looked for ways to make financial systems work better for communities," Roberto explains.

Beyond his professional accomplishments, Roberto remains dedicated to lifelong learning, community service, and faith. He speaks candidly about balancing work and personal life, the lessons he's learned in leadership, and his passion for guiding the next generation of public finance professionals.
