For many parents and students, one of the first questions that arises is: How old do you have to get a driver's permit in Virginia? The answer is 15 years and 6 months. That's the age at which a teen can apply for a learner's permit after passing the required knowledge and vision tests. Once issued, the permit opens the door to supervised driving and enrollment in a state-approved driver education program—an essential step in preparing for full driving privileges.

At 2020 Driving School, students get access to DMV-approved instruction from certified professionals who understand both the letter of the law and the real-world skills needed for safe driving. The school offers the full range of Virginia driver education services, including classroom learning, behind-the-wheel training, re-examination courses, and driver improvement clinics.

Another frequently asked question is: How old can you be to get your license in Virginia? For teens under 18, the minimum age to receive a driver's license is 16 years and 3 months—but only after holding a learner's permit for at least nine months and completing an approved driver education program. That includes both classroom instruction and behind-the-wheel training, which 2020 Driving School provides with unmatched flexibility and care.

To meet the growing demand for convenience, 2020 Driving School also offers a fully online driver education course. This option allows students to complete the classroom portion of their instruction at their own pace from home. Combined with the school's hands-on driving instruction, the online course offers the perfect balance of flexibility and expert guidance.

In addition to teen education, 2020 Driving School supports adult drivers, commercial learners, and those needing to retake the permit test. Their services include:
