

Bradley Vercosa Unveils New Personal Website Highlighting 30+ Years of Restoration Expertise

A new digital platform shares the journey, insights, and services of a disaster recovery veteran

Wellington, Florida Apr 5, 2025 (Issuewire.com) - Bradley Vercosa, a seasoned expert in disaster recovery and water damage restoration, has officially launched his new personal website: www.bradleyvercosaflorida.com. Designed to reflect his decades of hands-on experience in restoration, mold remediation, and hurricane cleanup, the new site serves as both a personal story and a professional resource.

The website offers an in-depth look at Bradley's career, which spans over 30 years of restoring homes, businesses, and public spaces after major disasters. From responding to major hurricanes across Florida, Texas, and North Carolina to helping with the cleanup efforts at the Pentagon and World Trade Center area following the 9/11 attacks, Vercosa's career has been rooted in real-world crisis response.

"This website isn't just about me," Vercosa says. "It's about the work—the kind that happens behind the scenes, quietly, but makes a real difference in people's lives. I wanted a place where I could share my experiences, offer guidance, and let people know what goes into doing this job the right way."

The site features sections on Vercosa's background, core services, past recovery work, and values that guide his approach: responsibility, precision, and respect for the people he serves. It also includes updates on industry trends, the importance of fast response to water damage, and the human side of restoration.

One key focus of the platform is education. Many homeowners are unaware of the dangers of untreated water damage, especially when it comes to mold, hidden structural issues, and long-term health risks. Vercosa hopes his site helps fill that gap.

“Too many people wait too long to call for help. By the time they realize what’s happening, the damage has already spread,” he says. “If this site helps even one person act faster or make a better decision, then it’s worth it.”

Visitors to the site will also find a personal touch—from his time growing up in New York and Brazil to his years coaching youth soccer in Wellington. These experiences have shaped the steady, hands-on approach that defines Vercosa’s work today.
