After a distinguished career in private law enforcement, including his role as Police Chief of Staff for a large metropolitan police department, Curtis has successfully transitioned into real estate, joining forces with his wife to help buyers and sellers navigate the complexities of the market.

He founded a successful security company and has held various leadership roles throughout his career, which has honed his skills in management, communication, and community service. "I believe in building generational wealth for my family and community," Curtis adds. His dedication to creating a legacy that enriches the lives of his six children and 15 grandchildren is the driving force behind his work in real estate.

Known for his integrity and relationship-building skills, Curtis credits his rapid success in real estate to the robust network and trust he fostered during his public service career. He is also the author of the books Who Is Watching While They Pray? and Selling The Unsellable Home, where he shares valuable insights and experiences from his journey.

As a passionate advocate for the Dallas area, Curtis is excited about the region's booming job market, the influx of major companies, and the benefits of no state income tax. "These factors create incredible opportunities for new residents, sellers, buyers, and investors alike," he explains. The Dallas/Fort Worth Metroplex offers a dynamic environment where anyone can thrive.

Outside of his professional life, Curtis is a track and field enthusiast who enjoys fishing and riding his Harley Davidson. An ordained deacon since 2001, he continues to serve his community in various capacities.
