Why Their Work Matters

Illustrations are more than just pictures. For children, images are usually the first way they learn and understand things. A character that is drawn perfectly makes the child feel curious, excited, and comforted. Good design also helps children focus and follow along. That's why this prestigious brand works hard to match the tone and message of every story.

The agency believes in simple, clear artwork that children can understand. They also believe in including broad voices and styles so that all kids can see themselves in the books they read.

A Message from the CEO

Sandra Morris, founder and CEO of Children's Illustrators New Zealand, shared this message:

"We believe that every kid deserves stories they can understand and enjoy. Our aim is to support publishers, educators, and writers by offering premium-quality, beautiful, and honest illustrations. We work with great attention, not just to draw pictures but to help tell important stories. Our illustrator knows how to get in touch with young readers, and we take pride in working together."

Working with Clients

Children's Illustrators New Zealand works with both local and international clients. They collaborate with first-time authors, small publishers, schools, game developers, and more.
