

Jonathan Joss, Voice of John Redcorn in King of the Hill, Tragically Shot in San Antonio

Actor's sudden death shocks the entertainment world and sparks tributes from fans worldwide.

San Antonio, Texas Jun 5, 2025 (IssueWire.com) - The entertainment world is mourning the tragic loss of actor Jonathan Joss, who was best known for voicing John Redcorn in the hit animated series King of the Hill. According to reports, Joss was fatally shot in San Antonio, Texas, in an incident that has sparked widespread grief and renewed conversations about community safety and Indigenous representation.

Joss had a powerful presence in media, not only as a voice actor but also through his roles in Parks and Recreation and films focusing on Native American stories. His portrayal of John Redcorn was one of the few examples of consistent Indigenous representation in American animated television.

Early reports from the San Antonio Police Department suggest the shooting took place during a confrontation near a public event space. As of now, no suspects have been arrested, but authorities continue to investigate the case.

Social media platforms have been flooded with tributes, with hashtags like #JusticeForJoss and #RedcornForever trending across the U.S. and beyond. Fellow actors, fans, and Native American leaders have called his death a devastating loss for cultural storytelling.

Jonathan Joss's legacy is deeply rooted in his commitment to cultural authenticity. For many fans, his work gave voice and visibility to underrepresented communities in mainstream media. His loss is not only personal but symbolic — a reminder of how far we've come and how far we still need to go.
