From intimate patios to palatial rooftops, the city's dining scene is reimagining what it means to dine with flair.

Outdoor dining is a phenomenon more than it is a trend. For those in Raleigh, outdoor dining exists for every palate to enjoy a casual al fresco lunch or dinner, kid-friendly expanse or finer evening beneath the stars. And with the kind of moderate weather we get in Raleigh for most of the year, it's no surprise our restaurants have turned patios, rooftops and gardens into welcoming outdoor spots that make everyone feel comfortable and at home.

One of the great things about eating outside is the feeling of being part of a community. Some of the best are located along sidewalks, at rooftops or tucked in unlikely spots and where diners can enjoy them long into the night. Whether placed against the busy streets of Raleigh, hidden away in quiet places, rodeo restaurants foster an environment built on simplicity, conversation and unforgettable experiences. Other venues are upping their game with live music, seasonal decorations and locally-inspired menus showcasing the region's culinary tapestry.

Now, for both visitors and locals, outdoor restaurants Raleigh Nc is also a matter of convenience and—of course—is in line with recommendations from health officials. At the same time, these are venues which offer a lot of seating for groups while keeping the vibe casual in line with today's dining demands. There are plenty of them, and they don't start with a cold.

As the city expands, Raleigh's outdoor dining scene is poised to become an integral aspect of its identity. For those on the hunt for an amazing place to eat outside, Raleigh's outdoor restaurants serve up far more than just a meal.
