Ava Hart walks into Lennox & West with a plan: rebuild her life, rise in her career, and never again let desire distract her. She's smart, ambitious, and determined to prove herself. But nothing in her strategy prepared her for Cole Bennett—the confident, magnetic executive whose presence changes everything.

From the very first handshake, Ava feels it. The spark. The danger. The pull of something both irresistible and completely off-limits. Cole is her mentor, her boss, the man who could unlock her future—or destroy it. His gaze lingers too long. His voice dips too low. And when they're alone, the air between them hums with an electricity Ava can't ignore.

Professional boundaries begin to blur with stolen glances, late-night meetings, and whispered conversations that grow dangerously intimate. A rooftop confession nearly crosses the line. A kiss in the elevator shatters it. Suddenly, every choice feels like a risk. Every touch like a gamble. And the one-man Ava shouldn't want becomes the only one she can't stop thinking about.
