

George Stanley Paving Calls for Greater Support of Local Infrastructure and Skilled Trades

Construction Leader Urges Communities to Value Quality Work, Trade Careers, and Smarter Investments in Roads and Neighborhoods

Tulare, California Oct 8, 2025 (Issuewire.com) - George Stanley, owner of George Stanley Paving, is calling on communities to take a closer look at the roads, sidewalks, and infrastructure they rely on every day—and to value the skilled tradespeople who make them possible.

“Most people don’t think about the road under their tires until it’s cracked or unsafe,” Stanley says. “But the truth is, what’s beneath our feet matters as much as what’s in front of us. Ignoring that only costs more in the long run.”

The Reality on the Ground

The American Society of Civil Engineers (ASCE) reports that more than 43% of U.S. roads are in poor or mediocre condition, costing drivers an average of $1,000 per year in extra vehicle repairs. Meanwhile, the construction industry faces a shortage of over 500,000 skilled trade workers in 2025 (Associated Builders and Contractors).

Stanley sees these issues as connected. “We can’t fix roads without people who know how to build them. And we can’t attract those people if we don’t respect the work they do,” he explains.

Lessons from the Job Site

Stanley built his career hands-on, working every part of the trade before starting his company. His approach is shaped by mistakes as much as successes. “I once rushed a job before a rainstorm and had to redo the whole lot at my expense,” he recalls. “That taught me that cutting corners doesn’t save time—it just creates more work later.”

For him, the solution lies in shifting mindsets: valuing preparation, precision, and the people who do the work. “This isn’t just about asphalt and concrete. It’s about investing in accountability and pride,” he says.

What Communities Can Do

Stanley isn’t asking for donations. He’s asking people to act locally in three key ways:

- Support Infrastructure Funding: Attend town meetings, vote for road maintenance initiatives, and push for sustainable investment.
- Value the Trades: Encourage young people to consider skilled careers and recognize the expertise involved.
- Hire for Quality, Not Just Cost: When hiring contractors, ask about materials, methods, and certifications—not just the lowest bid.

“Good work costs money, but bad work costs more,” Stanley emphasizes.

Stanley believes that improving infrastructure starts with small choices made by individuals. “You don’t have to be in construction to make a difference,” he says. “Pay attention to your roads, support your local crews, and stand behind people who care about doing the job right.”

As infrastructure needs rise nationwide, voices like Stanley’s are a reminder that lasting solutions require both investment and respect—for the work, the workers, and the communities they serve.
