

Model Aria Walton Attends Fashion Show at London Fashion Week & gets Scouted for Documentary by French Designer

London, United Kingdom Oct 3, 2025 (IssueWire.com) - Beautiful cover model and actress Aria Walton was invited to a fashion show at London Fashion Week recently, as a guest, and got scouted by Aurelie, the french designer behind the brand La Maison Opale to star in her up-coming documentary.

Walton, despite having an impressive international career as a commercial and editorial model, as she has graced the covers of world-renowned fashion magazines like Harper's Bazaar, Glamour, L'Officiel, and any more, and has recently been doing runway at London and Paris Fashion Weeks, has always taken pride in attempting to be low key in her personal life. The model enjoys her work, but has said in previous magazine interviews that she isn't a huge fan of attending events and putting herself out there that much, because she's more of an introvert, but that she will transform into a different, more outgoing and artistic person when it comes to modeling and acting, similar to Beyonce, who is naturally shy, but will transform into her alter-ego "Sasha Fierce" when working.

Due to her low key personal life, she wasn't initially recognized when at this fashion show at London Fashion Week, and made sure to sit in a more obscure area amongst the other attendees, as she was there to support a fellow model who was indeed walking at this show. It wasn't until the end of the show, when Walton stood up, that she was spotted by many photographers who rushed to take her photograph. This is when she caught the attention of the French designer and was later sent a message on social media to collaborate with her, as she told the model that she believed her striking presence embodied the aura of Catherine of Medici, the past queen of France, and that this was the aura she was seeking, to wear her popular Medici dress, while starring in her up-coming documentary.

Walton was also interviewed backstage for France Télévisions to talk about her impression of the La Maison Opale collection. The model said that as soon as she saw the designer's collection she knew she would be successful in the fashion industry, because the intricate, handmade, and unique designs and colours of the dresses stood out to her, in a world of fast fashion.

Walton is known for building long-lasting relationships in the fashion and film industries, due to her impeccable work ethic, and straight-forward business mindset, and is set to walk for other designers at Paris Fashion Week, in addition to also walking for La Maison Opale on October 4th, at the Lutetia Hotel, thanks to her new and established professional relationship with the designer.
