

Superior Systems Reminds Colorado Springs Homeowners to Winterize Sprinklers Before Holiday Season

Family-owned irrigation specialist with 35+ years of experience emphasizes importance of protecting sprinkler systems ahead of winter gatherings.

Colorado Springs, Colorado Nov 22, 2025 (IssueWire.com) - Superior Systems, a trusted sprinkler and landscaping company serving the Colorado Springs region, reminds homeowners to prioritize sprinkler winterization as the holiday season approaches. With over 35 years of experience protecting irrigation systems from winter damage, the family-owned business emphasizes that proper winterization remains essential even as families focus on holiday preparations.

Founded over three decades ago by owner Johnny Smothers, Superior Systems has established itself as a reliable partner for homeowners seeking professional sprinkler maintenance and winterization services across Colorado Springs, Cimarron Hills, Fountain, and Pueblo West.

The holiday season often shifts homeowner attention toward indoor preparations and celebrations, but neglecting outdoor sprinkler winterization can lead to costly damage that becomes apparent only after winter passes. Superior Systems encourages homeowners to complete this essential maintenance before cold weather arrives and holiday activities intensify.

As temperatures continue to drop across southern Colorado, the window for proper sprinkler system winterization narrows. Homeowners preparing their properties for holiday gatherings should ensure that outdoor systems receive the same attention as indoor spaces to avoid unexpected expenses in the coming months.

Superior Systems specializes in sprinkler installation, maintenance, and winterization services, with additional capabilities in landscaping and hardscaping projects. The company's expertise in irrigation systems has made it a trusted resource for property owners who understand the importance of protecting their investments from freeze damage.

What clients often describe as a "generational business," Superior Systems has built lasting relationships that span from grandparents to grandchildren. This multi-generational client base reflects the trust and reliability the company has established over 35 years of service in the Colorado Springs area. The company maintains an impressive 98 percent retention rate among its winterization clients, with homeowners returning year after year for seasonal maintenance.

The winterization process involves systematically removing water from sprinkler lines using compressed air, ensuring that no moisture remains to freeze and expand within the system. Superior Systems' experienced technicians understand the unique challenges posed by Colorado's dramatic temperature swings and unpredictable weather patterns, providing thorough protection tailored to the region's specific climate conditions.

Cold weather can arrive suddenly in Colorado, making proactive preparation essential. Water left in pipes and components expands when it freezes, causing cracks, breaks, and significant damage. By the time spring arrives and homeowners turn their attention back to outdoor spaces, systems that skipped winterization often require expensive repairs that could have been easily prevented.

As a family-owned business, Superior Systems takes pride in serving the Colorado Springs community across generations. The company's decades of experience have created a foundation of trust that homeowners rely on, particularly during busy seasons when multiple property maintenance priorities compete for attention.

Smothers emphasizes that while the holiday season brings focus to indoor celebrations, protecting outdoor investments remains important. Proper winterization now prevents disruptions to spring and summer landscaping plans, ensuring that irrigation systems are ready when warmer weather returns.
