By Crispin Thompson In an era where artificial intelligence is mastering logic, prediction, and speed, Crispin Thompson reminds us that the greatest power left to humans is not computational—it's emotional. In The Human Advantage: Emotional Intelligence in the Age of AI, the founder of The Leadership Studio delivers a compelling manifesto for a future where empathy, awareness, and connection become the ultimate competitive edge. Thompson's central question is deceptively simple: What happens when machines learn faster than we do? His answer unfolds through a blend of research, storytelling, and real-world leadership insights that show how emotional intelligence (EQ)—once considered a “soft skill”—is now the most critical survival tool in business and beyond. With clarity and warmth, Thompson guides readers through the habits and mindsets that define emotionally intelligent leadership: building trust in hybrid teams, managing emotions before they manage you, and leading change with courage and compassion. Each chapter reframes technology not as a threat, but as an opportunity to partner with AI while preserving the essence of what makes us human. What makes The Human Advantage stand out is its practicality. Thompson doesn't just theorize about empathy—he operationalizes it, showing how organizations can design emotionally intelligent cultures that scale as fast as their technology. This isn't a book about resisting the rise of machines—it's about redefining success in their presence. For executives, team leaders, and lifelong learners navigating the new digital frontier, The Human Advantage is both a mirror and a map: a call to stay grounded, present, and profoundly human in a world racing toward automation. Because, as Thompson reminds us, the best leaders won't outthink the machines—they'll out-care them.
