Omnione Publishing Announces the Release of The Signature Smile and Me: Concave Spiriting – The Selves Examined – Consoulic Academia

Omnione Publishing, in collaboration with SADJ International, proudly announces the publication of The Signature Smile and Me: Concave Spiriting – The Selves Examined – Consoulic Academia, a major new work by philosopher, author, and spiritual leader Dr. Sonny A. Dotson Johnson, founder of Consoulicism ~ School of Philosophy (Est. 2023).

This volume represents a pivotal contribution to Consoulic Academia, offering a prophetic and systematic exploration of what Dr. Dotson Johnson defines as the Dual Selfism Age — a philosophical epoch in which the soul fragments into multiple selves, re identifies, and wages war against itself. Through rigorous analysis, poetic testimony, and ritual Consolation, the book situates unrequited love, soul fragmentation, and metaphysical renewal within a comprehensive philosophical framework.

About the Book

The Signature Smile and Me is both testimony and treatise. It expands Dr. Dotson Johnson's Unrequited Love Series, articulating the adversarial relationship between the Soulistic Swamp and the Spiritual Womb, while introducing the concept of “Dying for Love Divisions.” The book provides what the author calls “Colour to the Concaved of Souls,” illuminating the hidden dimensions of pain and renewal through philosophical explication and poetic articulation.

Extended Philosophical Contributions I. The Dying for Love Divisions

Dr. Dotson Johnson defines these divisions as existential thresholds the soul must traverse when unloved. They expose the fractures of the Dual Selfism Age and reveal the necessity of confronting absence before discovering the Identifiable Invisible Self. Each division is paradoxical: destructive yet restorative, painful yet revelatory. They are not incidental but structural, marking the soul's journey through deprivation and preparing it for eventual reconciliation.

II. The Unrequited Love Series

This series frames unrequited love as a metaphysical inheritance, rooted in the absence of nurtured selves across lifetimes. It situates twin flame and soul mate dynamics as manifestations of the inner war between selves, offering both poetic testimony and systematic analysis. The series demonstrates that unrequited love is not merely emotional but ontological, a condition of the soul's fragmentation. It is through this series that Dr. Dotson Johnson establishes unrequited love as a philosophical category, not simply a psychological state.

III. The Soulistic Swamp

The swamp represents the adversary domain of buried pain, where trauma consumes the body and essence. Fed by the “Signature Smile,” it symbolizes concealment and stagnation, forcing the soul to confront its hidden suffering. Within Consoulism, the swamp is necessary: it reveals the cost of denial and compels the soul toward confrontation and eventual renewal. It is the place where testimony is silenced, and therefore the place where philosophy must intervene to restore voice.

IV. The Spiritual Womb

Counterpart to the swamp, the womb is the locus of renewal and rebirth. It embodies the paradoxical truth of Consoulism: that destruction is prerequisite to restoration. Within the womb, pain is transfigured into Consolation, and dissolution becomes the seed of rebirth. The womb is the sanctuary of transformation, the axis of metaphysical renewal, and the site where the soul is re knit into wholeness.

V. Colour to the Concaved of Souls

This phrase captures the illumination of fragmented souls through philosophical and poetic articulation. It represents the aesthetic dimension of Consoulism, where philosophy becomes art and ritual, giving voice and hue to what has been hidden in concavity. It insists that philosophy must not only analyze but also illuminate, bringing colour to what has been darkened. In this way, Dr. Dotson Johnson situates Consoulism as both academic system and creative movement.
