

Mold Growing Ductwork - Installed In 99% of Homes in America! Why & What Happens Now

MOLD found in 99% of Homes Links HVAC Systems to Improper Code Approved Duct Materials Used Nationally

Pensacola, Florida Dec 18, 2025 (IssueWire.com) - For decades, the wrong materials have been used in HVAC ductwork construction and Americans need this change for their health safety. With new developments by Environmental Mold Expert Christopher McCormick with the FL State Mold Inspector's office have been found that the duct materials absorb and trap moisture produced naturally by your HVAC system to provide cold air inside the property. The moisture that is trapped inside the ductwork and plenum soon poses a health risk issue with the presence of microbial growth forming which produces mycotoxins. Conflicting issues between state and federal have kept this from being resolved on a national level due to states individually handling mold differently. New scientific proof shows that the materials approved which are being used within the construction of most all HVAC systems and ductwork are the primary cause of mold growth problems within houses across the country.

Many agencies, included but, not limited to the EPA, OSHA, CDC, ICC and the SMACNA and more are all partly responsible for the oversight and are responsible for helping with the corrective measures needing to be made to address this health concern for the American public.

Christopher P McCormick, having over 23 years in Restoration and Construction as a Mold Expert is leading the industry with new knowledge and imperative change to keep Indoor Air Quality living conditions for Americans safe and free of mold toxins.
