Masqat, Oman Jan 7, 2026 (Issuewire.com) - Sarfraz Hussain, a prominent social reformer and journalist originally from Azad Kashmir and currently based in Muscat, Oman, has issued a special statement on the completion of 15 years of his global humanitarian mission. His journey is a profound saga of a man who, despite facing the betrayals of kin, severe financial crises, and heart disease, made the selfless service of humanity his ultimate purpose.

From Childhood to Journalism:

Since childhood, Sarfraz Hussain preferred the company of elders and wise discourse over typical play. This early intellectual maturity led him to the field of journalism in 2010. During his professional duties, he encountered the oppressed segments of society and deep human struggles, after which he vowed to provide moral, legal, and financial assistance to anyone in distress. To date, he has assisted more than 3,400 individuals globally.

A Period of Trials and Migration to Oman:

A significant part of Hussain's life was spent amidst severe financial hardships and physical illness (heart disease). While he always prioritized his relatives over himself, he was met with profound deception from those very people. Taking advantage of his late father's illness, attempts were made to deprive him of his ancestral land rights through forced documentation, and obstacles were even created in building his father's grave. In response to these injustices and false legal cases, Hussain chose "patience" and "detachment" over anger and revenge, eventually migrating to the Sultanate of Oman through a dignified and legal process.

The Philosophy of Silence and Allegations:

Responding to a question, Sarfraz Hussain stated: "I have never offered a clarification for any allegation leveled against me; instead, I accepted them and changed my path. Providing clarifications requires significant time, which prevents you from focusing on other important matters, causing the mind to become entangled. One begins to drift from their original purpose by trying to convince others of their innocence. Whether an allegation is big or small, it is better to accept it and move on."

Social Reform and Psychological Insight:

Hussain noted that he focuses not just on people's mistakes, but on the underlying motives behind them. He remarked: "Anger exists in everyone, but it is vital to reform the one who is instigating the person in provocation. It is more important to find the reason why an addict fell into addiction and work on that, rather than simply imprisoning them. Forming an opinion based on hearsay is not wisdom. If we reach the elements creating disorder in society and try to reform them, issues can be resolved."

Empowering Youth and the Principle of "Pardah-Poshi":

Hussain's mission is built on the noble principle of "Pardah-Poshi" (Total Privacy). He has counseled countless men and women on the brink of suicide and brought them back to life. From Muscat, he keeps a watchful eye on his homeland, becoming a strong voice for the oppressed wherever their voice is suppressed. He has also provided strategic research and reports to law enforcement agencies in Pakistan and Azad Kashmir to prevent crime.

Advising the youth, he said: "Youth must focus on their nerves. If your nerves are strong and you are working for collective interests, no power in the world can defeat you. By collective interests, I do not mean fighting each other to build roads and bridges—that is the work of traditional local politicians' pawns who divide even blood relations for such interests."

The Value of Time and the Call of Conscience:

Reflecting on the modern era, he said: "In the past, people walked miles and it took time to deliver messages, yet people still had time. Today, airplanes and mobile phones have reduced travel and communication to seconds, yet people have no time. If anyone has time, let me know. Do not let circumstances change you; you must change the circumstances. If you cannot sleep at night, reflect: Is a neighbor or a relative hungry, sick, or helpless? Perhaps someone is crying out to Allah for help, and being so close to you, Allah has taken away your sleep."

A Lifelong Commitment:

Reiterating his resolve, Hussain vowed to remain active in the welfare of humanity until his last breath. He emphasized that his mission is not tied to any color, race, religion, or political party, as saving a collapsing humanity requires no funds—only sincerity and a pure heart. Despite having high-level international access, he has never sought personal favors, a testament to his high character.
