"Spring is when Wisconsin homeowners start dreaming about outdoor living again," said Tim Quigley, owner of Quigley Decks. "After a long winter, people are ready to create spaces where they can entertain, relax, and enjoy warmer weather. Whether you're building a new deck, replacing an old one, or upgrading your railing system, now's the time to start so everything's ready when summer arrives."

Quigley Decks specializes in custom deck construction tailored to individual properties, family needs, and aesthetic preferences. Whether homeowners envision simple platform decks for entertaining or complex multi-level structures with custom features, the company's quarter-century of experience enables the team to bring diverse visions to life.

Beyond deck construction, Quigley Decks offers specialized expertise in modern railing systems for both exterior and interior applications. The company provides cable, aluminum, and composite railing options, each offering distinct advantages for different applications and aesthetic preferences.

Quigley's Irish background brings unique perspective to projects, infusing work with attention to detail and craftsmanship that clients consistently praise. His truthful, direct communication style ensures homeowners understand exactly what to expect throughout every project.

"I believe in keeping things honest and straightforward," Quigley said. "Homeowners deserve to know exactly what they're getting, what it will cost, and how long it will take. No surprises, no runarounds—just direct conversation about what works for your property and your budget."

Cable railing provides modern aesthetics and unobstructed views, perfect for properties where preserving sightlines is priority. Aluminum railing offers virtually maintenance-free performance that Wisconsin homeowners appreciate, resisting rust and weathering while offering diverse color options. Composite railing combines traditional appearance with modern durability and low maintenance requirements.

Quigley Decks' quarter-century of experience in Madison provides deep knowledge of local building requirements, regional climate considerations, and challenges that Wisconsin weather presents for outdoor structures. This expertise enables the company to recommend solutions delivering both immediate appeal and long-term durability.

The customer-focused philosophy ensures every project reflects both professional craftsmanship and individual homeowner preferences. The combination of humor and professionalism creates atmosphere where homeowners feel comfortable asking questions throughout planning and construction.
