

Quokkio Announces 'Receipt Printer' for AI Decisions Ahead of EU Enforcement

Vilnius based startup captures Chain-of-Thought reasoning to convert AI decisions into regulator-ready audit trails

Vilnius, Lithuania Feb 11, 2026 (IssueWire.com) - With EU AI Act obligations taking effect in August 2026, a new Vilnius-based infrastructure startup is launching a technical architecture to address the compliance gap plaguing enterprise AI deployments. The company unveiled its Chain-of-Thought (CoT) capture technology, which the company describes as "the receipt printer for AI decisions."

The infrastructure addresses a critical technical void: while companies deploy AI for high-risk decisions in hiring, lending, and operations, most lack the technical architecture to document how those decisions were reached."

When regulators ask for explainability, companies currently offer process descriptions," said Adrijonas Leonavičius, founder of Quokkio. "We're building the API layer that captures actual reasoning from models like Claude and GPT-4o and converts it into regulator-ready audit trails."

The implementation targets CoT-enabled models that expose intermediate reasoning steps. Quokkio's proxy layer intercepts API calls, parses thinking blocks, and structures outputs into cryptographically signed records containing input parameters, model logic, decision rationale, and human review timestamps.

"It's defensive infrastructure for organisations. Companies are exposed to €35M fines, and we're providing evidentiary infrastructure."

Led by an unconventional virtual quokka "CEO" who documents the company's public build process, Quokkio combines technical infrastructure with radical transparency. The startup has already attracted investor interest. Beta API access is scheduled for Q2 2026.

"This Valentine's Day, we offer compliance officers what they actually require: verifiable documentation," said the quokka CEO.
