Her approachable demeanor and ability to connect with others allow her to foster trust and create a supportive environment for those in treatment.

Sydney's journey into addiction counseling was influenced by both professional transition and personal insight. After working in accounting within a school district, she felt drawn to a service-oriented career that aligned with her lived experience and desire to help others. She holds an Associate's Degree in Criminal Justice and is pursuing a second Associate's Degree in Addiction Counseling, with plans to complete her studies in fall 2026. Beyond her clinical role, Sydney is actively engaged in recovery-focused community service. She participates in Hospitals and Institutions programs, bringing recovery meetings into rehabilitation facilities each month and serving as a meeting secretary. "I love being able to help others and guiding them to achieve the success I have achieved. It's a great feeling when you see the light come on in someone's eyes after being in recovery and knowing that you're making a difference in their lives, and being able to help clients in the facility find sponsors from the women I bring to share their stories is what gives me the joy and appreciation of this service commitment. It's really a full circle moment for me every time I do a meeting," Sydney shares.

Looking ahead, Sydney aspires to become a certified addiction counselor and to inspire individuals in early recovery by demonstrating that lasting change is possible through support, understanding, and perseverance. Her dedication, empathy, and commitment to education continue to make a meaningful impact on the lives of those she serves.
