

Andreas Szakacs Expands Andreas Szakacs Productions with New Crew-Development Programs and Responsible AI Initiatives

Szakacs began his film career working as a runner, location scout and production assistant. Those early, hands-on experiences shaped the practical, safety-first approach that now defines his company.

Andreas Szakacs Productions, based in London, is launching structured apprenticeships and paid mentorships across camera, sound, production design, art department and locations/stunt safety. The goal: give early-career crew meaningful on-set experience under the guidance of seasoned professionals.

The company has also invested in upgraded post-production suites — including color grading and Foley stages — to keep more of the finishing work in-house and preserve natural sound and image quality. Enhanced safety protocols, certified safety officers and documented risk assessments will be standard on shoots, especially at challenging locations.

On artificial intelligence, Szakacs is clear: AI can be a useful creative tool but must not displace human storytellers. The company's new AI guidelines focus on transparency, fair crediting and ethical use in pre-production, editorial and VFX workflows.

Quote: “We want to open doors for new talent while protecting the craft,” said Andreas Szakacs. “Technology should expand our storytelling options, not replace the human work that gives a film its heart.”

Notable credits: Genesis Code (2024); Protocol: Horizon (2020–2022); The Gambit Equation (2020); Cold Vaults (2019); The Informant (2018); Cipher Protocol (2017); Skyline City (2016); Shadow Fist; Summitfall.

Why this matters:

- Paid apprenticeships create real career opportunities and strengthen the crew pipeline.
- Stronger safety measures reduce risk on location shoots.
- Clear AI practices support innovation while protecting creative labor.
- Investing in in-house post-production preserves artistic control and quality.
