

WFHSeekers.com Launches Free Remote Job Platform to Support Job Seekers, Recruiters, and Employers Nationwide

Founded by a mother laid off twice in five years, the platform removes financial barriers by offering free remote job access, free job postings, and career resources for job seekers.

Virginia Beach, Virginia Apr 16, 2026 (IssueWire.com) - WFHSeekers.com, a free online platform designed to connect job seekers with remote and work-from-home opportunities, is officially available to the public. The platform is completely free for job seekers searching for remote work and also free for recruiters and employers to post job opportunities.

Founded by entrepreneur and working mother Takima Thomas, WFHSeekers.com was created from personal experience and a desire to make job searching more accessible for individuals facing unemployment or career transitions.

After being laid off twice within five years, Thomas experienced firsthand the financial and emotional stress that often accompanies job loss. As a mother seeking flexible employment, she discovered that remote work provided the adaptability needed to balance work responsibilities and family life.

“I know what it feels like to be on the other side of unemployment,” said Thomas, Founder of WFHSeekers.com. “When you’re laid off, you’re often trying to survive on limited resources. Many people don’t have extra money to invest in job search tools or expensive platforms. I wanted to create something that makes remote job opportunities accessible to everyone, regardless of their financial situation.”

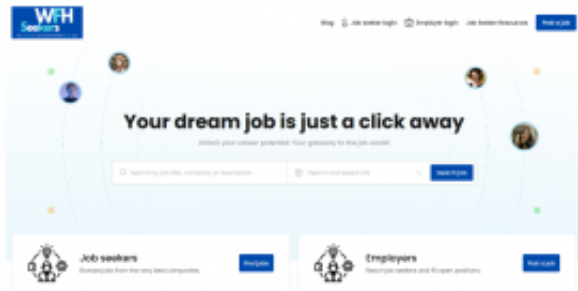

WFHSeekers.com was designed with affordability and accessibility at its core. The platform allows job seekers to search for remote and work-from-home jobs without paying subscription fees or membership costs. Recruiters and employers can also post job openings at no cost, making it easier for companies to connect with qualified remote talent.

In addition to job listings, WFHSeekers.com offers a dedicated Job Seeker Resources page featuring partnerships with companies that provide free and low-cost career tools. These resources include resume support, career development tools, and educational opportunities designed to help job seekers strengthen their skills and increase their chances of securing employment.

By removing financial barriers from the hiring process, WFHSeekers.com aims to create more opportunities for individuals seeking flexible employment and for businesses looking to expand their remote workforce.

“Our mission is simple,” Thomas added. “We want to help people find real remote jobs without adding financial stress to an already difficult situation. Whether you’re a parent, someone between jobs, or someone looking for flexibility, this platform was built with you in mind.”

WFHSeekers.com is now live and available nationwide.
