New York City, New York May 18, 2026 (Issuewire.com) - AI Tool Discovery, the AI tools directory at aitooldiscovery.com, today launched a prompt store on Gumroad. The store carries prompt packs and skill files covering AI tools in music generation, video creation, image editing, and developer workflows, organized by task and ready to use.

The release comes after three years of testing 1,851 AI tools across English, German, and Swedish editions of the site. That research kept surfacing the same friction: most users working with AI tools know what the tool does. Working out how to prompt it is the part that takes time. The store was put together to solve that.

Initial releases include Suno AI lyric templates, a multi-tool video vault covering Runway, Kling, and Luma, image generation packs for Flux and Stable Diffusion, Claude system prompts, and skill packs for Claude Code and Antigravity developer workflows. Each paid product ships with a free sample version.

Every prompt in the store was tested against the tool it covers before inclusion. None were adapted from existing free resources or assembled from templates. That matters because a large share of freely available prompt lists online were written before recent model updates changed how the tools respond.

Amara, editor-in-chief at AI Tool Discovery and a writer at medium.com/@aitooldiscovery, said the idea had been building for a while. "The question we kept getting was what prompts actually work. Not what might work, what does. Every product in the store started there. We tested it before we packaged it."

The store is live at aitooldiscovery.gumroad.com. New products are added when tools are evaluated.
