

ADA-compliant braille signs have been required since 1990. That hasn't changed. What has changed is how closely those rules are enforced. Fines can start at $75,000, which puts real pressure on businesses to get it right.

That's where experience matters. Braille Sign Pros has spent over 20 years working in this space, helping clients understand what's actually required and what's often overlooked. Not every sign manufacturer focuses on compliance the same way. Some treat it as a design job. This isn't that.

An ADA exit sign has to do more than point the way out. It needs to meet exact standards such as tactile lettering, proper spacing, Grade 2 braille, and correct placement. Small details, but they carry weight. When those details are off, the sign fails just compliance.

And it doesn't stop at exits. ADA sign requirements apply to every permanent room and doorway. Offices, stairwells, restrooms, corridors—each one needs the right signage. Braille Sign Pros helps businesses handle that full scope, whether it's a single install or a complete facility rollout.

The company works across industries, from construction and healthcare to hospitality and architecture. It also supports other sign companies as a third-party partner, delivering consistent, compliant, ready-to-install products. Projects involving California ADA signs or other state-specific standards receive the same level of attention.

Every sign is made in the USA and built to last. The focus stays on durability, accuracy, and getting it right the first time, so businesses aren't left fixing problems later.

Braille Sign Pros keeps things straightforward: clear answers, reliable timelines, and signage that meets the standard without cutting corners. For facilities that need to stay compliant, that kind of approach makes a difference.
