

Miklos Toth, MD, Advances Women's Health Through Decades of Clinical Excellence, Research, and Global Impact

Lenox Hill Hospital OB-GYN Combines Surgical Expertise, Academic Leadership, and Humanitarian Efforts to Shape the Future of Care is a highly respected OB-GYN at Lenox Hill Hospital whose career spans more than five decades of dedication to women's health. A graduate of Semmelweis University in Budapest, Dr. Toth completed his obstetrics and gynecology training at leading institutions in New York, establishing a foundation for a distinguished career defined by clinical excellence, innovation, and compassionate care.

Board-certified in Obstetrics and Gynecology since the early 1980s and a Fellow of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Dr. Toth has built a reputation for providing comprehensive care across a wide spectrum of women's health needs. His expertise includes general gynecology, high-risk obstetrics, advanced imaging, and complex surgical procedures. He is particularly recognized for his skill in cesarean sections, hysterectomies, and the accurate diagnosis of gynecologic cancers. Patients and colleagues alike value his attentive bedside manner, thorough follow-up, and commitment to individualized care.

In addition to his clinical work, Dr. Toth has made significant contributions to academic medicine. He serves as a Clinical Assistant Professor at Hofstra University, where he is also a member of the Admissions Committee. His research and scholarly work include numerous articles and book chapters exploring topics such as the role of infection in reproductive health and the clinical applications of 3-D Doppler ultrasound. His ongoing research focuses on asymptomatic pelvic infections and their long-term effects on fertility, particularly those linked to undiagnosed male partners—an area that continues to shape understanding in reproductive medicine.

Dr. Toth's contributions have earned him prestigious honors, including the Ellis Island Medal of Honor and membership in several international medical societies. Beyond his academic and clinical achievements, he is deeply committed to humanitarian work. Together with his wife, Elena, he co-founded the Millennium Health Foundation, supporting healthcare initiatives in Uganda. Their efforts include establishing the Toth Health Clinic and Elena's Boutique, which focuses on empowering women through economic opportunity.

He has also demonstrated a strong commitment to community service in the United States, serving for six years as a New York State Department of Health Ombudsman at the C.J. Carter Nursing Home for paraplegic patients.

Through his enduring commitment to patient care, research, education, and global outreach, Dr. Miklos Toth continues to make a lasting impact on the field of obstetrics and gynecology while inspiring future generations of medical professionals.
