new group of aspiring pilots begins their journey. This month, that energy is palpable at Air Hawke's Bay as 11 determined students from India officially started their Commercial Pilot License course. Working in close coordination with HM Aviation, these cadets are the latest to join a training pipeline that has turned dreams into airline careers for over a decade.

For these 11 individuals, the move to New Zealand's North Island represents more than just a change in geography. It is a calculated step toward a professional cockpit. The partnership between HM Aviation and Air Hawke's Bay is not just a business arrangement; it is a proven bridge that has already transitioned hundreds of Indian students into roles with major airlines back home.

Why New Zealand Remains a Top Choice for Indian Aviators

The decision to train at Air Hawke's Bay comes down to a mix of high standards and a welcoming environment. The academy is famous for its modern fleet and a team of instructors who understand the nuances of the industry. Perhaps most importantly for this group, the curriculum is specifically designed to align with the Directorate General of Civil Aviation requirements in India. This ensures that when these students finish their New Zealand CAA license, the conversion process is straightforward and efficient.

The training starts with a deep dive into aviation theory at ground school. From there, the cadets move into intensive flight training phases.

Building the Next Generation of Captains

HM Aviation has always focused on quality over quantity. By keeping batches focused and providing high levels of student support, they ensure that every cadet gets the cockpit time and mentorship they need. This hands-on approach is why so many former graduates are currently flying for leading carriers in India today.

The team at HM Aviation expressed their pride in this new group, noting that the long-standing collaboration with Air Hawke's Bay continues to be a vital part of shaping the global aviation landscape. They believe these 11 cadets from the June 2026 batch are well on their way to becoming disciplined, airline-ready professionals.

For those looking to follow in these footsteps, HM Aviation one of the leading pilot training academies in India is currently accepting inquiries for upcoming batches and providing career counselling for the next generation of flyers.
