

Demand The Limits Helps Florida Injury Victims Who Feel Overlooked by Their Current Attorney

Boca Raton, Florida Jun 28, 2026 (Issuewire.com) - Clients who are questioning whether to switch personal injury attorneys in the middle of their Florida case do not need permission from their current lawyer and do not have to start their case over from scratch. That is the message Demand The Limits, PLLC is sharing with injury victims across the state. The firm regularly works with clients who arrive mid-case after a breakdown in communication, a stalled claim, or pressure to accept a settlement offer they did not fully understand.

Research consistently shows that a large share of personal injury clients consider changing lawyers during their case, most often because they feel ignored, uncertain about their case status, or pushed toward an early settlement. Demand The Limits has built a practice around stepping into these situations with clarity and urgency.

Signs It May Be Time to Switch Personal Injury Lawyers

Clients who contact the firm for a second opinion commonly describe one or more of the following:

- Calls and emails go unreturned, case updates arrive inconsistently or not at all.
- The case has stalled with no clear explanation, such as medical records not being gathered, and key deadlines being missed.
- Pressure to accept a settlement offer before fully understanding the value of the claim or the long-term impact of the injuries.
- The attorney cannot clearly explain strategy, next steps, or the reasoning behind key decisions.

“By the time someone calls us, trust has usually already been damaged. Clients ask us constantly whether they can switch personal injury lawyers mid-case without losing the work that’s already been done. The answer, in most Florida cases, is yes, and the process is more straightforward than most people expect,” said Alan Siegel, Esq., Co-Founder and Managing Partner of Demand The Limits, PLLC.

How Switching Personal Injury Attorneys in Florida Actually Works

Under Florida Bar Rule 4-1.16(a), clients have the right to discharge their attorney at any time, with or without cause. Changing personal injury lawyers in Florida does not require a judge’s permission at most stages of the case and does not mean paying two separate legal fees. In contingency fee matters, the old and new attorneys typically divide a single fee based on the work each performed. The client does not pay more out of pocket just because a new law firm took over.

Switching also does not mean starting over. Once a new firm takes the case, it reviews the file, identifies what needs immediate attention, and moves forward from where the prior attorney left off. In cases where the switch itself creates momentum, such as renewed attention, clearer strategy, and direct communication, the change can improve outcomes rather than delay them.

Even when a settlement offer is already on the table, a free second opinion can help a client decide whether the offer reflects the full value of the claim before a final decision is made.

What Demand The Limits Brings to a Case Transition

The firm's attorneys have collectively recovered more than $120 million for injured clients across Florida and hold recognition from Super Lawyers, AVVO, Martindale-Hubbell, The National Trial Lawyers, and the Million Dollar Advocates Forum. The firm handles auto accidents, trucking accidents, motorcycle accidents, medical malpractice, slip and fall, and wrongful death cases, with offices in Boca Raton and Orlando serving clients throughout South Florida, Palm Beach County, Broward County, and statewide.

Recent case results from the firm include a $4,250,000 recovery for a traumatic brain injury client, a $3,500,000 recovery for a trucking accident, and a $1,500,000 recovery for a car accident, where the original pre-litigation offer was $60,000.

"When a case has stalled or communication has broken down, switching attorneys can create the momentum that was missing. We step into these cases ready to move. Our job from day one is to tell the client exactly where things stand, what we see, and what we plan to do next," said Andrew Odza, Esq., Co-Founder and Managing Partner of Demand The Limits, PLLC.
