Why adult orthodontics matters

More adults are choosing orthodontic treatment than ever before, and that's a trend. Adults come to his office with goals that are often as much about function and health as they are about appearance: straightening teeth that have shifted over time, correcting bite problems that contribute to wear or discomfort, or simply achieving the confidence that a well-aligned smile brings. His practice specializes in adult-focused care, where treatment plans respect busy schedules, aesthetic preferences, and long-term dental health.

Treatment options tailored to you

Dr. Neil Gorin Orthodontics offers modern, evidence-based solutions tailored for adult lifestyles. A cornerstone of his adult practice is clear aligner therapy, including Invisalign for adults, which allows patients to pursue discreet treatment without compromising daily life. For cases that require traditional braces, He provides comprehensive metal and ceramic bracket options with treatment plans designed around each patient's specific needs and oral health history.

He does not use self-ligating brackets and does not offer certain adjunctive technologies or services such as Propel. He finds that careful diagnosis, precise appliance selection, and consistent clinical oversight produce predictable outcomes without relying on those modalities. His practice model emphasizes direct care from the orthodontist. When you come to his clinic, you'll receive treatment planning and supervision directly from him.

A patient-centered experience

Every treatment begins with a thorough consultation. He performs a detailed clinical exam, reviews dental and medical history, and uses digital imaging and diagnostic records to build a full picture of your orthodontic needs. He explains options clearly, lay out realistic timelines and costs, and collaborates with patients to choose the plan that fits their life. His goal is to minimize surprises and ensure that each patient feels informed and comfortable throughout treatment.

He believes in efficient appointments scheduled to respect your time. His team supports a smooth patient flow so that visits are focused and productive. He do not employ dental hygienists within the orthodontic practice; routine dental cleanings and periodontal care are managed in coordination with patients' general dentists to ensure comprehensive oral health throughout orthodontic treatment.

Clinical philosophy and outcomes

Orthodontics blends science, mechanics, and artistry. He rely on proven biomechanics, careful tooth movement sequencing, and consistent follow-up to achieve stable, functional results. For adult patients, stability and periodontal health are especially important. Treatment plans account for bone levels, gum health, and any restorative needs so that the final outcome supports long-term oral function

He partners with local dentists and specialists when treatment calls for interdisciplinary care, whether that means coordinating with restorative dentists on crown and veneer plans or with oral surgeons for surgical-orthodontic cases. His focus is always on delivering outcomes that improve chewing function, joint comfort for those without TMJ treatment needs, and smile aesthetics

Real results, real lives

One of his patients in Brooklyn came to me after years of avoiding photos because of crowded front teeth. Together, he planned a clear aligner course that fit her work schedule and social life. Over the course of treatment, she reported improved confidence, easier flossing, and a better bite that reduced sensitivity on worn teeth.

Community and continuing education

He is Certified by the American Board of Orthodontists in 1995 reflects a long-standing commitment to clinical rigor and professional excellence.
