

Inside Portals: A City Where Buildings Are Grown, and a Network of Forty-Seven Worlds Under Threat

Chester Craig's new novel imagines the Weaver's City — and the catastrophe now tearing its network apart

New Rochelle, New York Jul 30, 2026 (Issuewire.com) - Once Portals crosses its first threshold, Chester Craig's novel opens into the Weaver's City, where structures are grown rather than built and information moves through the city itself via bioluminescent sap. It's here that Dr. Alex Reeves finds the missing Jordan Reeves — alive, but now bound into the network's foundational architecture as a functioning part of the system that keeps forty-seven worlds connected.

That network is tearing. An unauthorized expansion, led by a visionary named Eldrin, has put the entire structure at risk of collapse. AM I AM highlights Portals as a title for readers who want their portal fiction built on a fully realized system — one with its own architecture, its own rules, and real consequences when those rules are broken.
