built a career centered on providing exceptional care in hospital-based emergency departments. His work reflects a deep commitment to helping individuals and families navigate some of the most challenging and vulnerable moments of their lives.

Dr. Womack earned his Doctor of Medicine Degree from Ross University School of Medicine in 2012. Following medical school, he completed his residency training in Emergency Medicine at the University of Toledo Medical Center from 2012 to 2015. During this intensive training, he developed advanced expertise in trauma management, acute medical emergencies, critical care, and the complex decision-making required in emergency department settings.

His residency experience provided the foundation for a career dedicated to treating patients across a broad spectrum of medical conditions. From traumatic injuries and severe infections to cardiac emergencies and neurological crises, Dr. Womack developed the clinical skills necessary to manage high-acuity cases with confidence and precision.

Today, Dr. Womack serves patients in Cartersville, Georgia, where he continues to provide comprehensive emergency care. His responsibilities include evaluating and treating urgent medical conditions, responding to trauma cases, stabilizing critically ill patients, and coordinating care to ensure the best possible outcomes.

For Dr. Womack, medicine is more than a profession—it is a calling that began unexpectedly during his youth. His interest in healthcare first emerged in ninth grade after sustaining a basketball injury that required an MRI. The experience sparked a fascination with medicine and the role healthcare professionals play in diagnosing and treating injuries.

While he initially considered a career in radiology, Dr. Womack ultimately realized that his outgoing personality and desire for direct interaction with patients made emergency medicine a more natural fit. The specialty offered exactly what he was seeking: meaningful patient relationships, clinical variety, and the opportunity to make an immediate impact.

“What I enjoy most about practicing emergency medicine is the opportunity to help people during some of the most difficult and vulnerable moments of their lives,” says Dr. Womack. “The emergency department is unique because it brings together patients from all walks of life, often on what may be their worst day. In those moments, my role is to do everything I can to provide care, stabilize their condition, and offer reassurance to both patients and their families.”

He adds, “I value the fast-paced and unpredictable nature of the emergency room, where every case is different and requires immediate readiness. Whether I am treating a minor injury like a sprained ankle or responding to life-threatening emergencies such as a heart attack or severe trauma, I approach every patient with the same level of focus and commitment.

Outside of the hospital, Dr. Womack remains actively involved in his community through coaching youth basketball. His dedication to mentoring young athletes reflects many of the same principles that guide his medical practice, including leadership, discipline, teamwork, and compassion.

Whether he is caring for patients in the emergency department or helping young athletes develop confidence and life skills on the basketball court, Dr. Womack remains committed to making a positive impact on those around him.
