

Porch-Ready Fiction: Dex System Publishing's Picks for Unhurried Summer Evenings

Low-stakes, atmospheric titles for readers who want mood over momentum.

San Francisco, California Jul 30, 2026 (Issuewire.com) - Not every summer read needs a pulse-pounding plot. Dex System Publishing's latest feature highlights lighter mystery and slice-of-life titles suited to porch or hammock reading — the kind of unhurried evening that becomes more common once the Fourth of July fireworks fade and the season settles into its slower rhythm.

The lineup includes Souls Beneath by Zoules The Magnificent and The Fabric of the Hill: A Psychedelic Story About Hippie Hill by Preston Ashcroft, alongside two Ronald Bartholomew titles: All the Flowers in the Rainbow: The Lamentations of Jonesy Cartwell and E+Drive: The Good Ghost (A Tale of Choice).

"Mood carries these books more than plot does," a Dex System spokesperson said. "They're built for reading outside, with the light fading and nowhere in particular to be — that's a very specific kind of summer evening, and we think this list nails it."

The release is aimed squarely at regional and lifestyle press covering unhurried, mood-driven summer reading rather than national book-trade roundups. A 'summer reading nook' visual angle is available for outlets that support imagery alongside the feature.

Ronald Bartholomew's two appearances on this list — spanning very different tones — make him a useful anchor for outlets that want to illustrate the range within a single author's catalog rather than across the full imprint.
