

Read After Dark: Dex System Publishing's Dreamlike Fiction for Late Summer Nights

Dream-logic and altered-consciousness fiction for the hours after the heat breaks.

New Rochelle, New York Jul 30, 2026 (IssueWire.com) - As late-summer evenings cool down, Dex System Publishing is spotlighting fiction built for night reading — stories with dream-logic and altered-consciousness at their core, offering a stranger counterpart to the bright, fireworks-lit nights readers had around the Fourth of July.

The feature includes The Dream Navigator by William Benjamin and Cyber Dracula on the Moon by Stephen Jacobs, alongside Visions Through Time: The Reality and Risks of Remote Viewing by Lyle Davenport and Whispers from the Stars: The Starborn Reptiles' Planetary Computer by Blake Edwards.

"These are books for the part of summer when the days start getting shorter but nobody wants to admit it yet," a Dex System spokesperson said. "There's a strangeness to that transition, and this list leans into it."

The strange, dreamlike tone marks a deliberate departure from the catalog's daytime beach reads, positioned for late-night and insomnia-adjacent reading-list features. A themed 'read after dark' visual is available for outlets that support graphics alongside the text.

Outlets covering sleep, insomnia, or late-night routines may find this list a useful pairing piece — fiction chosen specifically for its tonal fit with the hours after most other reading has stopped for the day. Author availability can be arranged on request.
