RevenuePack Launches: One Man, One AI, and a Promise Indiana's Trades Can Actually Hold Him To

A former general contractor from a town of 400 built an AI receptionist — then sent it to call 22 '24/7' companies at 1 a.m. A machine, talking like a person. Only 8 humans answered. Every word is published. $249 flat; miss a call, the month's free.

Indianapolis, Indiana Jul 24, 2026 (Issuewire.com) - RevenuePack, a one-person artificial-intelligence company run from a Hancock County town of about 400 people, opened its founding pilot today — an AI receptionist built on a blunt premise: the most expensive call in the trades is the one nobody answers.

The launch came with receipts.

In the early hours of Monday morning, founder Adam Ferree sent a machine to do the talking: his AI called 22 central Indiana businesses that advertise 24/7 emergency service — plumbers, locksmiths, tow operators, HVAC and garage-door companies — and held one short, polite conversation with every line that picked up, asking whether someone could really respond at that hour.

Only 8 put a human on the phone. Five went to voicemail, six never answered, two dead-ended in automated menus.

Every conversation is public, word for word, at revenuepack.com/audit — including named credit for the eight that kept the promise.

And the twist under the whole experiment: the machine checking for humans was, itself, the receptionist those lines were missing.

"That test is the whole company in one night," Ferree said. "The website says 24/7. The phone at 1 a.m. says otherwise. I built the thing that makes the promise true."

WHAT REVENUEPACK DOES

RevenuePack's AI receptionist answers a business's forwarded and missed calls around the clock, greets callers in the business's own name, captures the caller's name, number, job, and address, and pages the owner's phone within seconds — job details, not a voicemail light.

Every call is recorded and transcribed into a live job ledger the owner can check from any phone.

A FLAT PRICE — AND A GUARANTEE IN WRITING

The founding pilot is $249 a month flat with 550 AI call minutes included — no setup fee, no long-term contract, month to month, additional minutes at carrier cost.

And the guarantee, quoted from the company's own terms:

"Any month RevenuePack fails to answer a call that your line forwarded to it during your covered hours, that month's $249 base fee is free — refunded or credited, your choice."

On RevenuePack's public comparison page — where every competitor price is dated and sourced from the vendor's own site, including managed services charging $449 a month for 500 minutes — none of the reviewed competitors publishes a money-back guarantee.

BUILT AGAINST THE "PROGRAMS"

Ferree founded his own construction company in 2014 and spent years as a general contractor before building RevenuePack — years spent watching tradesmen get bled by lead fees, pay-per-call marketplaces, and marketing "programs" that bill like slot machines.

"This is a receptionist, not a program," Ferree said. "Flat price. Written guarantee. No lead fees, no contract, no upsell ladder. If I miss your calls, you don't pay me that month. It's as simple as a handshake — except this one's written into the terms."

PROVE IT YOURSELF, ANY HOUR

Skeptics don't have to take the company's word for any of it.

The demo line — (765) 200-9397 — is answered live by the same AI that made the 1 a.m. calls; call at 2 p.m. or 2 a.m. and try to stump it.

The company also publishes a dated price-comparison page (revenuepack.com/compare) and a missed-call cost calculator (revenuepack.com/missed-call-cost) with sources shown.

WHAT'S NEXT

Ferree plans to repeat the 1 a.m. audit market by market across Indiana and publish every result, pass or fail.

Founding pilots are taken one shop at a time, and the founder does every setup personally.

ABOUT REVENUEPACK

RevenuePack LLC is a one-person Indiana company formed in July 2026, part of AMF LLC of Wilkinson, Indiana (pop. ~400). No staff, no call center, no venture money — one founder and the AI he builds with, making phone tools that stop local service businesses from losing jobs to missed calls.

Media contact:

Adam Ferree

adam@revenuepack.com

revenuepack.com

Media Contact

RevenuePack

@revenuepack.com

7652009397

http://Revenuepack.com

Source : RevenuePack

See on IssueWire