

The 2026 Literary Time Capsule: Books That Define the Modern American Experience

If you buried a time capsule today, Dex System says these titles belong inside

New Rochelle, New York Jul 2, 2026 (Issuewire.com) - What would future generations need to read to understand America in 2026? Dex System's seventeenth Semiquincentennial release proposes a literary time capsule — five titles capturing the anxieties, curiosities, and imagination of the current moment. Bury this list in a box for the tricentennial, and it would tell you almost everything about what we were afraid of, curious about, and hoping for.

Russell Lavine's The Zeus Mandate and Yug Gohan's They Are Here both wrestle with power and unseen forces shaping modern life, tapping into a very 2026 unease about who — or what — is really pulling the strings. Lyle Davenport's Visions Through Time: The Reality and Risks of Remote Viewing adds a nonfiction perspective on where speculation meets reality, grounding the list's paranoia in documented history rather than pure invention.
